

Introduction

It is essential that appropriately skilled and experienced contractors and advisors are selected for war memorial projects to ensure the memorial receives the best treatment possible. The level of expertise required will depend on the materials of the memorial, its age, condition and any listed status. War Memorials Trust has produced detailed guidance on Types of contractors and their roles to help determine the appropriate type of contractor for a particular project. In general WMT recommends that any contractors working on war memorials have experience of working with historic structures.

WMT is unable to recommend any contractors or companies. The charity does not have the resources to assess works in detail or provide the level of quality assurance that recommendation would require. However, the charity has compiled details of registers, professional bodies and conservation-accredited professional advisors to help you identify a suitable contractor. Please note that many contractors will travel as part of their work so you do not only need to look in your immediate area.

If you are unsure about the skills of a particular contractor you can ask for examples of previous relevant work and references.

Registers, directories and professional bodies for contractors

• The Building Conservation Directory

There is no formal accreditation required to be included in the Directory and a fee is paid to be included.

The Directory includes details of companies as well as suppliers of a wide range of conservation products and services.

Conservation-accredited professional advisors

Conservation-accredited professional advisors will have proved their experience and skills in working with historic buildings so should be used on complex or large projects or those involving listed memorials. You may also wish to involve a conservation-accredited professional advisor to ensure that a project is managed appropriately.

There are a number of professions related to war memorials that have conservation-accreditation. Many of these professional conservation-accreditations cover the whole of the UK but there are some which may be specific to an individual country.
