Date: 23rd April 2025
Status: Immediate release

In 2024-25, War Memorials Trust recorded a significant fall in the number of cases of theft, vandalism and other forms of anti-social behaviour directed at war memorials. Data available to the charity shows 13 incidents compared to 32 the previous year. This indicates that 0.00013% of war memorials in the UK have been subject to such problems, compared to 0.03% in 2023-24.

Of the cases the charity was made aware of, and this is not necessarily all of them, there were 6 reports of theft or attempted theft in 2024-25, an increase of 1 on the previous period. Incidents of anti-social behaviour and graffiti fell from 18 to 7 whilst cases of vandalism fell from 9 to 4.

Any event of this type should be condemned. They cause incredible levels of upset and outrage in the community. However, these events are rare and it is important to recognise the overwhelming respect given to our war memorial heritage. The fact they do not occur often but cause great distress ensures they receive a great deal of attention with perpetrators often shamed when identified.

War Memorials Trust can provide advice, guidance and potentially grant funding, to those impacted by such incidents. Dealing with the results of such attacks inappropriately can cause further damage so the Trust highlights the importance of obtaining professional advice. For example, seeking to remove graffiti the wrong way may cause paint or chemicals to seep into stonework and cause permanent staining which could have been avoided if a best conservation practice approach had been used.

Custodians can be proactive in deterring theft by ensuring their war memorial is protected with SmartWater available free of charge through In Memoriam 2014. Since 2011, In Memoriam 2014 has enabled communities to apply for their free SmartWater online see www.inmemoriam2014.org.

War Memorials Trust’s Director, Frances Moreton, said: “Most of our war memorials represent the graves in the UK of those who died in conflicts overseas and whose bodies were not repatriated. These memorials are where family and friends paid their respects. The memorials are not about specific conflicts or events but remember individuals and their sacrifices.

Damaging or attacking these memorials is an appalling act which should be condemned. But we should also recognise the great respect our war memorials are held in by the vast majority. The bad behaviour of the few should not detract from the respect that the wider community has for our war memorials.

Anyone concerned about a war memorial, or who has spotted a problem, can contact War Memorials Trust for advice, ideally providing photographs. You can also get involved in conserving this unique aspect of the UK's heritage by submitting pictures and condition information to War Memorials Online, www.warmemorialsonline.org.uk. This will help build a greater understanding of the condition of our war memorials and make sure they are recorded so should the worst happen there is information to help identify stolen items or assist with repairs."

Notes to editors

1. For details of specific cases of theft and vandalism in each year please see the associated appendix for the relevant News releases or statements. 2. In Memoriam 2014 is a partnership between DeterTech and War Memorials Trust. In Memoriam 2014 offers protection for war memorials at risk of theft or damage by enabling communities to mark them with a forensic liquid called SmartWater. The traceable liquid has a unique chemical composition and forensic code that can be applied so if memorials/features are stolen they can be returned to the scene of the crime. It is available free of charge to war memorial custodians. SmartWater is well known to criminals, who acknowledge that it represents a genuine threat to them as the product has had a 100% conviction rate in hundreds of cases. For further information please visit www.inmemoriam2014.org or www.warmemorials.org/im2014-press.
3. War Memorials Online is seeking to create a greater understanding of the condition of war memorials.
